woodhull a claylix, Editresses and the city of New York or Memphis, at the sance, and bearing interest at the rate of six parents of finance, but are running a good weekly paper. Mrs. Woodhull is a sedi-announced candidate for the Presidency. She is a pretty, nervous, blondish-looking lady of thirty or thereabouts, with a beautiful profile, short hair, a remarkable soft voice and winning manner, and very sociable and sensible. She seems partial to Southerners, and wants the Southern editors to give her a call always. I mention this for the benefit of those gallant young editorial brethren of mine, the senior of the Macon Telegraph, and the editors of the Miledgeaville Union, Savannah Republican and News, and Columbia Enquirer, and the venerable old gentleman of the Augusta Constitutionalist.

Mrs. Woodhull is in dead earnest about the Presidency; claims to have letters representing two hundred thousand yotes, pledging her that much strength, and is sure of an election. She has any quantity of Congressmen and leading politicians lobbying in her office. Her managing editor is a sharp Englishman, mandel Humphreys, and her news editor a young Southerner, formerly of the New Orleans Picayane. Her partner I did not see.

BEECHER, THE RELIGIOUS KING.

I will leave the press and say a word of Beecher, who, though an editor, is better known as a preacher. Everything monarchial in New York is sleek and well groomed. Beecher is varyly sofels his keeping. He has irreproachable broadcloth is handsome and looks tremendously self-satisfied. He runs his church like a small empire. He runs his church like runs and soul. He don't run any special religion, but goes it independently. His creed is a nort of seminous, electricism, neither moral, "ish, esh or fow," but a little of sil, elastic of convenient, but much in it good and actical. Beecher is a power—an unbired mental power in this sage. His silectual grasp is remarkable. I attled his church. I found the congreun reading the morning papers as a minary to service, and I man't for the Sunday W.

Arrived of the proposition, then for full for and estable benefit and its power in this silectual grasp is remarkable. I attled his church. I found the congreun reading the morning papers as a minary to service, and I man't for the Sunday W.

doubted mental power in this age. His intellectual grasp is remarkable. I attended his church. I found the congregation reading the morning papers as a preliminary to service, and I made a break for the Sanday World in my pocket. I didn't feel much reverential thus engaged, but then I had an example.

The services began by a beautiful young girl stepping forward in the chair and giving us, for lifteen minutes, a brilliant operatic religious solo. I tell you it was fine. This operatic science is dazning. One needs t go to the theater. So, hurrah for Beecher's moral opera and religious oligarchy! Beecher preached magnificently. His sermon was equal to any stump speech I ever heard. He kept his hearers entranced for two hearts. magnificently. His sermon was equal to any stump speech I ever heard. He kept his hearers entranced for two hours on a hot day. He made them laugh and cry, and glow with wouder and delight. He and glow with wonder and delight. He tracked his manuscript pretty closely, had every now and then would fly from it, and then came his best thing. His voice is dry and shrill, rather, and oratory unattractive, but holds you in spite of this. In other churches I heard the pious opera. Professional choirs are engaged, and sing in the praise of God, and for the glorification of the church, for a large, jully sum of greenhacks.

And as for the operatic ministers, they boots and the glossiest high beavers, suits of broadcloth that Beau Brummell would admire, their countenances looking over foppish little white neckties, with a seaming expression of frisky, theatrical complaceny, you feel that Captain Jinks has changed his venue and altered his "Horse Marines" refrain to the pious marines for the special moral edification of your conscience.

Russian Railways.

The Gazeta Polska announces that several Russian capitalists have started the project of a Siberian railway. The proposed line is to be upward of 1200 miles in length, and the greater part of it will pass through desert tracks in regions which are covered with ice and snow during ten months of the year. It is to commence at Nijai Novgorod, the
